quantity it sid appreciate. But this confidence and this appreciation of the currency, in public estimation, have not and do not establish or justify the assertion that the currency has been or is depreciated or cheanened is consequence of the volume or quantity issued. During the period when, as the press say, the hope of peace was appreciating the currency, the quantity of paper was greatly increasing, and has continued to increase until the present time. During this period gold, instead of paper, has declined from 200 to 145 per cent. If the volume of paper had decreased in value in comparison with gold then the price of specie whould have advanced to 580 per cent in paper. This is a fact which the press should not ignore, but should try to account for upon their dogma that the quantity of paper money invariably decreases its current value. Su ha fact as this should cause reflection and inquiry. This destroys all the theory of our hard money advocates. These came theorists tell us that the quantity of currency and its depreciation greatly chianced the price of provisions and other a ticles of necessity in the market, and that to bring down the price of everything we must degree our substitution of the prices of the produces of Northern indostry in our markets, in our currency, there will be found great uniformity in values up to the close of the war, and since 1863. There is so much uniformity that any candid man will attribute the difference to the great law of supply and demand in the produce market. The examination into all these facts can be made by every business man. This average value in our surrency during the eventful period of the last two years prior to the close of the war and during the fluctuations in gold is both extraordinary and gratifying, and proves the correctness and condiness of the opinions of those who, in bringing forward and establishing this system of currency, secured the Integrity of our nation and the prosperity and independence of our people. The facts above stated are incontro secure the quality of bank notes, and not to restrict the quantity of currency. The law does not limit the issue, provided the security upon which the issue is anthorized a placed in the State treasury. The people of the whole State are invited to come, deposit their security and take circulating notes therefor. No complaints have been made of over issues or inflation under this system, and the amount of currency taken out under this free Banking law has very little exceeded the unsafe and bogus money that existed before this law was enacted. Our legislatures had seen the evils of a doubtful or unsuand currency, and they directed their attention to improving the quality or safety of the currency. They knew that if the issue of bank notes was confined to and controlled by a deposit of good securities they had done all, that a free and intelligent people could require. The value of this system of currency was wonderfully and satisfactorily manifested in 1857, in the city of New York. When the great bank panic occurred all bank and individual credits were greatly below par, while the bank notes secured in Albaby were on a par with specie. The legislation of Congress, under the guidance of mistaken men, has deviated from our State law, and restricted the amount of credit currency to be issued to the country apon the pledge and deposit of our government bonds. This great mistake must lead to great complications and dissatisfaction, for it effectually desired the subject of legislation.

If we must abstract or destroy any redit, let it be the worst, not the best. But why destroy any? What are the gradulions of credit from the poor man's promise, who thus obtains bread to preserve his life, to the covernment that pledges the property and faith of a mation? "Each are but parts of one stupendous whole." In following up this chain a mutual dependence will be distinctly perceived and appreciated; individual interest will be found to give strength to every link, rendering a close connection absolutely necessary to preserve and studials the mighty fabric we have, with so much blood and treasure, established What would be the effect of a large withdrawal and destruction of our legal tender credites. The press say, universal bankruptcy. It may not be esties to bed. But still it will check, if not entirely suspend, the progress of all our great enterprises. Upon these "legal tenders" all our bank issues and credit are based. Without these credits our banks must stop their bus ness. It is these notes, or gold and silver, that the banks are required to possess in such quantities as to meet promptly all their liabilities. If the legal tender is withdrawn, then the banks must be supplied with an adequate amount of coin or suspend. If the limited demand for gold in our country keeps the premium up to forty-five per cent, what will be its price when one thousand six hundred banks shall come into the market in competition with the importer and booker? The answer is ready on every lip. Ruin to all our manufacturing, agricultural and commercial interests that was fell in the long and agonizing prosecution of the late war. And when this is done, and all this ruin ef

Winter Fashions.

In a Paris letter of the 10th of November we find the following notice of a new skating dress for excilemen which was then out in that city:—The tunic is made to fit to the waist, and, with the entire sult, is of dark gray cloth, trimmed with brown woodly edging, imitaing Astrakan. A long band of the same ornament is attached to each leg of the trousers. The Hangarian cap is to match, and is in all four inches high, two and a half of which are in imitation Astrakan. Boots of various styles are being rather frequently worn over the trousers. For this purpose the pantation should be close fitting and button at the ankle. With sver a costume the close fitting redingote should also be worn, buttoned up at the neek, or a very wide stuffly paletot.

The same communication contains the following:—The latest extravagance for ladies—it cannot yet be considered a fashion—is the three cornered hat, as worn by some of the kehituis of the Champs Elyabes. It is the exact initiation of the hat formerly worn by the famous Gardes Francuises. Apropse de chapeaux ordinaire, let us recommens those in black crape, with a bundle of "golden onta" thrown across the head; or, still better, very charming blue and white silk bonnets, trimmed with white and blue feathers or guipure, so arranged as to produce a pleasing contrast of color.
